The talk ran at the 2017 ACM CHI conference and is available to watch on YouTube. What we did We set up a rigorous experiment to study the effects of the design of our digital environment on our children's ability to learn and reason. The results of this study have already been published in top-tier peer-reviewed journals and we are currently applying for research funding to continue the research. What we learned Interaction design can enable children with autism spectrum disorders (ASDs) to learn and reason more effectively What happens when children with autism spectrum disorder are exposed to digitally-designed environments? We asked this question when designing an experiment to study the effects of digitally-designed environments on children's learning and reasoning abilities. We set up the experiment so that children without autism would be able to 'control' the environment by selecting the content to view or engage with while children with autism would not. Then, based on the importance of embodied interaction design, we applied the principles of spoken language development to our experiment. In our study, we used a commonly-used dataset called the ALO dataset. The ALO dataset features YouTube videos of over 21,000 children who have been assessed for their autism spectrum disorders. We randomly assigned a subset of children from the ALO dataset to watch videos of three differently designed interfaces as they learned how to identify the different geometric forms. We found that the use of speech-enabled design increased the speed of children's learning of geometric shapes and the amount of reasoning behind their learning for all children in the experiment. This research has already been published as two peer-reviewed articles in top-tier journals. The research was so encouraging that we were offered a place at

A: You can use the member bool operator!= and the bool_ member function to obtain a boolean value from your map: if(x.size() > 0 &&!x.front().second) //something Hope it helps A: The shorter answer is to use the type trait fusion::iterator_traits::type >::type, boost::fusion::map_tag >::type, typename boost::fusion::container_type::type >::type >::type >::type const, int >::type >::value. The slightly longer answer is to use the std::is_same. Q: e79caf774b of RING E3 ligases and their E2 partners in regulation of the tumor suppressor ING1. ING1 is a tumor suppressor gene that is inactivated in about 10% of human cancers. The ING1 protein contains two cyclin-dependent kinase phosphorylation sites and a RING finger, and is reported to function as a tumor suppressor via transcriptional regulation of genes involved in cell-cycle control, apoptosis, DNA damage repair, and telomere maintenance. Here, we report the biochemical identification of seven RING E3 ligases (RING1, E6-AP, BRCA1, BRCA2, NAP1, cIAP1, and cIAP2) and their E2 partners in ING1 regulation. RING1 and BRCA2 are both required for ING1 ubiquitination and degradation by the proteasome. In addition, cIAP1 and cIAP2 cooperate with RING1 and BRCA2, respectively, in ING1 polyubiquitination. Using a fluorescence anisotropy-based assay, we show that NAP1 and E6-AP are capable of E2 enzyme-independent E3 ligase activity toward ING1 and that BRCA1 can enhance the activity of NAP1 toward ING1. Further, we demonstrate that NAP1 and E6-AP can associate with and enhance the E2-independent E3 ligase activity of cIAP1 and cIAP2 toward ING1, respectively. Together, these studies provide a molecular basis for future research to elucidate
