"... Is this the new spiritual successor to The Elder Scrolls?..."
"While it takes some time to get the hang of it, the difference is clear for anyone who has played them. While Elder Scrolls V is filled with a variety of languages, the best you can do in The Elder Scrolls Online is one or two words that you can read when your character is not inside." "... to know that ESO will be a game with many, many fans and likely very successful." "Some of the best parts of the Elder Scrolls Online were the dialogue and voice acting that made the world feel so much more alive than the previous Elder Scrolls games." "... I like the direction they're going with the game..." "While I prefer the RPG elements to Elder Scrolls Online, the action-adventure-RPG elements done so well in it are no doubt a very welcome addition for a large fan base." "The social dynamic in the game are great." "The quest system is much less restrictive, providing a better sense of freedom and direction in your gameplay..." "I enjoy the fact that we'll be able to break out of the realm of fantasy and venture into other lands and explore through them." "The worldbuilding is very interesting." "The world itself looks gorgeous." "One of the more serious issues I've had with the MMORPG genre in recent years is their general lack of character customization... I did not come into this game thinking I could just stick a hat and pants on my character and it will play out like a typical RPG, but that's exactly what I found myself doing... you can't imagine how silly that looked." "It looks great and I'm sure the story I'm told about the future of the Elder Scrolls franchise will be interesting." "To not only take on the work done by the studios at Bethesda in the past, but also continue it for modern times, is a huge undertaking and accomplishment." "This game in particular has a very open-world design, which is clearly the direction the Elder Scrolls franchise bff6bb2d33

Press Release: Eagle Dynamics – Which Giveth, Taketh Away From Eagle Dynamics & Leading Edge Entertainment May 31, 2018 by Ryan O’Callaghan, Editor-In-Chief Eagle Dynamics and Leading Edge Entertainment have always put making great looking games for all types of players first. Now, with our upcoming titles Dangerous Curves and Rockstar Telekinesis, we turn our attention to helping women drive, control, and create. Dangerous Curves nails an important message in a way no one else would. When Lisa Smith gave a speech to an engineering conference, an auto mechanic friend of hers approached her and gave her the run-down of common car problems. One of them was about brake fluid. Apparently, when the level of brake fluid gets low, the brake pads on the rear wheels start to get really squishy, and some cars find that they can no longer stop on a dime. Less-than-ideal. But Lisa had her own take on the problem

Music and emotional disorders: factors influencing affect and auditory processing in depression, anxiety, and schizophrenia. The relative influence of emotional disorder, cognitive style, and musicality on affect and auditory perception was assessed using a musical emotion paradigm. Colpoys et al. (2004) reported that depressed adults, in contrast to non-depressed adults, prefer dissonant over dissonant-like melodies and the opposite pattern was observed for happy adults. A similar result was obtained with a similar listening task but with the musical material restricted to Western tonal scales, and the affective ratings of a larger participant group. Psychopathology is often associated with anomalous perceptual processing of speech and music (Porac and Silvia, 2011) and anomalous music perception and emotional processing (Keller, 1999), but direct comparisons using standardized emotional stimuli are extremely rare and aimed at non-clinical groups of musicians are virtually non-existent. Thus the purpose of the present investigation was to use a computerized and standardized musical emotion paradigm in order to assess the relative influence of emotional state, trait, and severity of disorder on the affective response, in a participant group with high intrinsic musicality (magnet musician). In addition, both emotional disorder and cognitive style were examined since a previous report (Colpoys et al., 2010) suggested that affective responses are associated with these factors. Results failed to provide conclusive evidence of any influence of symptom severity on affect or perception but depressed adults did exhibit differences in both response patterns and affective ratings. Surprisingly, the factor 'cognitive style' was found to have the greatest impact on affect. In addition, for the first time, this study investigated the influence of anxiety on affective response and perception in people with high symptom severity of a musical disorder, suggesting that exposure therapy to music could be a potential therapeutic tool in this group. The results of this study provide additional evidence of the influence of emotional disorder, and cognitive style, on emotional processing. However, the results also appear to suggest that parathetically associated factors can influence a significant part of the affective response.
