Related Links Q: RethinkDB Expected order of node match Is there a way to get a count of how many unordered matches in a match node. In my document I have a field called type Types: {type: String, enum: ['c','v','i']}, I have a query that I want to return 3 rows per a single row returned. The query is as follows let status = r.table('Statuses').filter(r.row('Status')['Type' === 'C']) Since this is an array the queries returns multiple rows. I want to get a count of how many unordered matches I have (in this case 3) and then use that information to further filter the results A: There are a number of ways you can do this. The first is to just filter out the matches to keep. r.table('Status').filter(r.row('Type' === 'C')['Type'].count() === 3).count() Or if you want something more stable you can use a MapReduce to group the results. This will return a list of maps with each containing a count of how many elements are equal to each other. r.table('Status').filter(r

Neural ensemble pattern classification on the basis of single-trial behavior. We present a novel online method for classifying human behavior online from single-trial EEG- and eye-recordings. The classifier integrates multiple single-trial parameters into a class decision by means of an ensemble of computationally efficient, trained, real-time classifiers, that is, an ensemble of weak classifiers (EWC), in a one-vs.-the-rest setting. The ensemble classifier is contrasted to alternative methods by empirical evaluation in three different case studies, namely in the classification of overt behavior in a human-robot interaction task, in the classification of motor imagery, and in the classification of motor execution. These results show that the ensemble classifier is able to outperform a whole class of alternative algorithms in all of the tasks used for evaluation. In addition, we compare the ensemble classifier to a simple adaptive model, and find that the ensemble shows improved robustness to noise and variations in the signal.

How to Choose a CPM-Rochester Controller? An automated control switch system is an essential tool to the modern industry. This article will discuss how to select the best CPM-Rochester controller? We've got what you need to choose the best one in any industries. There's no doubt that the best CPM-Rochester controller - a combination of PLC, communications technology, and a multi-function peripheral (MFP) - can help manufacturers and supply chains to manage all kinds of processes, increase efficiency, and save money. But how should you choose the best one? The article below lists out some of the essential considerations that will help you make the right choice. Does it look good? A CPM-Rochester controller is a very expensive piece of equipment. This is why it needs to be purchased from a reputable PLC manufacturer. This provides you with more confidence that the controller you are buying will last. On the night of the 21st of August, 2016, the NERV gang that knows us as “Mesos” was on its way to the local ‘Mesos space’ known as “Tarbawa”, or just simply “Mesos” in Tragedate Village, to discuss three topics at once: planning against Major Thormau. From the beginning of the battle between Major Thormau and the Culture Club, to the role of support units in said battle, and culminating in a General Ui...and the last of the outposts’—which falls heavily on the shoulders of its ‘Mesos’, the common ground, the people standing at “foot” with the normal population ———established a task force to protect those civilians.

The NERV Outpost’s mission was established by the commanders “Army”, “Veteran” and “Future”. Initially, when the commanders “Army” and “Future” were not available, Commander “Biblochou” and Commander “Undine”: chose the “Mesos” to be the manager of said task force.

According to the FCC, spectrum is allocated by a certificate of public convenience and necessity granted to the holder of a license for the use of the spectrum by that holder. The FCC issues spectrum licenses for specific uses and technologies. Federal communications law and policy are then enacted by Congress. Federal communications law requires the FCC to conduct a comparative hearing whenever two or more licensees seek to transfer control of a frequency, or channel, to the same recipient. Proprietary licenses are issued by a public utility commission or by private organizations, such as a hospital. Proprietary licenses are for exclusive use by an organization for a specific purpose, and control over spectrum must be transferred to the new owner. Proprietary licenses are generally issued for the frequency for which the license is required. In recent years, academic-industrial complexes have developed around many of the FCC's research areas. In the 1970s and 1980s, researchers working on cognitive radio — a wireless technique that allows a variety of radio users to simultaneously use the same frequency at the same time — helped to create the IEEE 802.22 standards. Cognitive radio is concerned with how to allow a technology to discover unoccupied frequencies and work around interference from other devices. This is being achieved by wireless devices and power sources that are able to detect other wireless devices and dynamically change their behavior. In March 2011, the FCC approved an amendment to the FCC's Part 15 rules that would provide a framework for the commercial development of wireless technology to do just this. After initial concern that the FCC was ceding control of the wireless spectrum to private-sector innovators, wireless interests saw this as a positive step for consumers, especially those who live in rural areas, because
