FIFA (from FIFA - Football + Action) is a football simulation video game series. Its goal is to recreate the sport of football for home consoles, and it is developed by EA Canada (most recent game titles) and Electronic Arts. The series focuses on the rules and regulations of football, player control and ball control. The FIFA series has also had a lot of game modes. There are quite a few modes: 11 vs. 11 team, mode simulation, 13 vs. 13 team, my team, club mode, mini-games, simulation, friendly, tournaments, career mode and a few others. Gameplay Gameplay is the main part of the FIFA series and usually consists of one of the game modes. Depending on the type of gameplay, you can focus more on the game's football or its footballers. FIFA is the official brand of the English Football Association and is used for all the FIFA games. Because of this, the game is entirely based on the English football ruleset. The gameplay is mainly different in regards to tactics, control and special abilities. Tactics Tactics is the main element of the FIFA series, and this is usually the gameplay we see in FIFA games. It is completely different from other football games. In tactics, players can manually choose their moves, calling for a free kick, changing the formation, setting up the game, etc. You can put up your players wherever you want (even completely off the pitch), have multiple formations, change formations, etc. The game automatically chooses the best tactics for your team and with some tactics you can play around the pitch, including bringing in players and benches. You can also alter an opponent's tactics. Control The pitch in FIFA is big and there are a lot of players on the pitch, so it is important to control all these players on the pitch. The most important thing to control is the ball. You control the ball with the left analog stick and your players with the right stick. You can go forward, backward, left, and right, using the A and D keys, as well as the Accelerator button and the left and right B buttons. You can press the X button and the left or right analog stick to sprint. If you get a press of the left analog stick, you hold that position and if you press the right analog stick, you quickly move to that position. Goals Go
