Seems to me that if you can't get a job at the Big Name Company, then (a) you either don't have the right connections or (b) you are not willing to work for some reason. Either way you need to learn to deal with reality. That means dealing with your lack of work experience and your lack of connections. The thing is that connections are often vague - "he's done well for himself for the last 3 years and my brother knows him" is not the same as "hey you know my friend's friend, he's the sales manager at Godaddy's in DC". Long announced Monday afternoon that he will run, and he will be challenging Rep. Ray Sansom, the current lieutenant governor. It's been a long time since politics in the Queen's Club Club has been anything but Republican. Long said the turnout in the primary this year was a "tremendous disappointment." Bill Long was elected in 2003 to represent an assembly district in North Jersey that stretches from the mountains to the New York border. He's a former New Jersey state legislator and a former school board member in Alexandria, Va. Long said he will be a supporter of President Bush's agenda for the country, but added, "I think this is a very important time to be a Democrat in this state. I have been a lifelong Democrat, so I'll be voting Democratic." In an e-mail sent to supporters of his campaign, Long said
