Players will put on a motion capture suit and breathe into a gas mask that collects data from different body parts while playing a football match. The data is then fed into a proprietary engine that infers the player's movement from the movement of their limbs, torso and head. This, in turn, allows players to move with a speed, stamina and reactions similar to their real-life counterparts. This kind of technology is pretty cool. Anyone who's seen the Human Engine, an avatar powered by real-life gamers playing on iClone, knows how it's done. It's a bit hard to get into the game and see how it's implemented in FIFA 22, but we'll have to keep plugging.

Q: using impersonation to connect to SQLEXPRESS does not give me required impersonation I am using WPF, C#. I have a local system SQL Server Express instance that I can connect to and use pretty easily. I would like to use Windows authentication, not SQL Server authentication so I have impersonation enabled. This is working. Now I am trying to use an instance provided through a third-party application that is not the one running the Windows authentication and I am not able to connect. In impersonation I am getting this error: A network-related or instance-specific error occurred while establishing a connection to SQL Server. The server was not found or was not accessible. Verify that the instance name is correct and that SQL Server is configured to allow remote connections. (provider: SQL Network Infrastructure, error: 26 - Error Locating Server/Instance Specified) That is where I am getting the "not accessible". The impersonation is working as far as I can tell. I am getting the same error if I use SQL Server Authentication instead of Windows Authentication. Is impersonation not meant to work with SQL Server Express instances? A: This is a known issue with SQL Server Express. You need to either use an instance name that doesn't conflict with SQL Server (like SQLEXPRESS, SQLEXPRESS1, etc.), or you need to use SQL Server Authentication which should work.
