This is what the Clintons have been doing for the past two decades. When they can't make up a new scandal or a new claim, they simply delay, delay, delay their investigation of the old one. And so it happened that yesterday, Judicial Watch released the vast majority of the State Department emails we sent to request records under the Freedom of Information Act of former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, in order to investigate her alleged improper server use. The State Department had ignored our request for these records for 20 months, as Judicial Watch filed a lawsuit to obtain them. When we moved to get these records through an expedited process, requiring only a 20-day response time from the department, the State Department said, "No. We are not going to do that. We're going to drag it out." We were told by Mr. Gannon, Deputy Legal Adviser to the Department of State, that the head of the FOIA office, Tom Shannon, was waiting to see what we would do about this decision to delay. Well, we did as we have done for the past two decades. We moved for summary judgment, an emergency relief that could be granted immediately. It took the State Department less than 24 hours to respond, which means they had until September 16th to get their act together and tell us what was in all of these records. Unfortunately, it has taken them another nine days, and we are still waiting for their response. Once we receive the documents, we will fight over them like we did over all the Clinton State Department records that we forced the department to produce in 2012. As you all know by now, the State Department has been unable to find these emails at all, even though they have conducted some 15 searches of the locations, to date, where Clinton could have e79caf774b
