For anyone beginning Photoshop, or wishing to create something unique, this chapter provides plenty of creative ideas and handy Photoshop templates to get you started. (And if you already know the basics, you can skip to the end and try out some of the additional creative ideas.) ## Creating a Bridge Using Photoshop is easier when you work with a tool called a `_bridge_` or `_layer_` that contains the Photoshop image, or the layers that make up the Photoshop image. Using a bridge makes it easy to work with either a single image or with multiple images on a single Photoshop document. When you open a Photoshop document, you see a blank canvas or white background. You can then add a new layer to the image and start working on it. Figure 1-1 shows a pre-painted photo with a new layer. By using a bridge, you don't have to worry about dealing with any of the layer-based features you might have trouble with in the beginning. You can preview your layers and figure out how to move them around on the canvas.

Q: Can any one tell me how to make a global variable visible to the whole MyApp? I have an issue in which, I am trying to access one global variable defined in one class and make it available to the whole application. But when I am trying to access this variable from another class, it is throwing nullpointer exception. I was trying to find the answer and from the answers I found over the internet, I came to know that most probably, global variables are defined in appDelegate as an instance variable and when the application enters in background, it will get destroyed and recreated automatically which will create new instance of appDelegate. Is there any way to get rid of this problem and make my global variable available to the whole application. A: When you open the image from the photo library, please save the image to the documents directory of your application.

NSArray *dirPaths = NSSearchPathForDirectoriesInDomains(NSDocumentDirectory, NSUserDomainMask, YES); NSString *documentsDirectory = [dirPaths objectAtIndex:0]; NSString *savePath = [documentsDirectory stringByAppendingPathComponent:@"NewImage.png"];

[UIImagePNGRepresentation(img.image) writeToFile:savePath atomically:YES]; And, you can get your file path from the document directory by calling NSString *filePath = [[NSBundle mainBundle]pathForResource:@"NewImage" ofType:@"png"]; where NewImage.png is the name of the file in your document directory.
