Dead Cells is a 2.5D sidescroller roguelike with a twist, where the concept of inventory is replaced by a pseudo-e-mail system. The goal is to solve puzzles, collect items and pass your e-mails through to the next level. The story is told by your own journal entries that you'll write in real time to save the day. And yes, the journal entries are optional and optional saved games exist. It can be played by one, two or four players. A four-player party is a rarity these days but four-player cooperative gameplay is DEAD Cells' way of being different. Dead Cells is the first game that features only my voice and lyrics to the music (well, and The Trevor Project.) All of the original music is written by RISEUP and is the best weird and wonderful soundtrack I've ever made. Steam and XBLA Decent, average game with a good soundtrack. Although the idea behind the email system isn't very original in comparison to other roguelikes, it makes playing in coop way more interesting. The multiplayer mode might be a bit confusing at first, but an explanation on the tutorial screen helps a lot. A very interesting experience for those who are into the diary system roguelikes. The voice acting is very good, and the soundtrack is downright excellent. The only thing I wish this game had was more colour. It's all grey and brown, and not even really well coloured grey/brown. The only thing that brought me back to playing this game was being able to tell my co-op partners apart at least. The quest system makes each playthrough very enjoyable, and the equipment variety adds to the actual gameplay in a pleasing way. The game is very good, however, some progression problems make it very hard to recommend it until the bugs are fixed. The protagonists are strangers in a strange land. Waking up in a suburban home without any memories on Halloween night, you wake up in a new world with new powers and new enemies to kill. All the various collectibles and secrets are there to discover, however this is not a typical rogue-like, and there are no classes or levels. There are no tutorials and no boring exposition. You are a SORCERER with DEATH BY CHAOS. A SORCERER travels the vast wilderness, searching for the individual souls that became trapped into the binary system

Inside: June is National Gooley Movie Month Slow it down a bit for just a minute more so that I can catch you up on the gooley goodness of Georgia and San Francisco. I'm having a Canadian winter. — You Gotta Have a Gimp is currently in production in Vancouver. He and a colorful troupe of suits continue to wrap up the film. The film is planned for release in the fall. Yippee! — I was in Chicago last week for a fun kiddie camp. (My little kids went to this camp once before—I'll be doing this again next year. Not sure if my other kids will like the walking beanbags, the three that are dogs, the scale, or the colorful balls on the wall. But I've tried and I'll continue to try.) — On Thursday, I toured the Paper Mill Studios, a fantastic interactive studio/museum/indoor playground/creative resource in Coatesville, PA. Three days later, I toured both the National Museum of Postal History and the National Postal Museum. — It's National Gooley Movie Month! Did I tell you about this yet? It's part of the National Film Preservation Foundation's ongoing efforts to celebrate the important role that film has played in our lives, and to create new opportunities for youth and adults to engage with film and film culture at the local, regional, national, and global levels. The global celebration begins today, Monday, June 20, and continues through July. And if you want to learn more about the decade-long initiative, here are links to the NFPF website, the NFPF Twitter account, the NFPF Facebook site, and a blog by Jeffrey Wells, the Foundation's Executive Director. And since I travel quite a bit, if you check out any of these links during the summer and like what you see, you can fill out the survey and make your voice count in favor of the films that you want to see preserved. You can also start right now and add some of the sites from the NFPF to your "favourite list" on your browser so that you can report on them over time. I'll post a list of movies that are part of the celebration, and you can even add them to your summer to-do list.
