Thanks Spectboy, I may just have to buy another at a good price and do the restoration myself. Is it a good thing to refret a used guitar? The rings and truss rods are all replaced. Should I try to find one that needs repairs? Thanks The P3's original locking bridge has been designed to provide maximum adjustability for strings of different gauge. The P3 offers two types of strings - guitar strings, and strings designed for acoustic use. Gibson began making custom guitars for themselves in 1952, but their custom electric guitar was not developed until later, at the behest of Wes Montgomery. The Gibson Custom Shop, as it is widely known, began by offering alternative versions of well-known models like Les Paul Standard and ES-335. However, after a few months of existence the Custom Shop came back to its custom shop roots and offered custom guitar models that no one else offered at the time.

So, how much time have you spent building and playing your own Custom Shop guitar or fretboards? Gibson's custom electric guitar was designed by W.O. Atwater for Gibson engineer R.J. Shore in 1952. The ES-335 model had a shorter scale length (D'Averno, 1989) than the majority of electric guitars and is the most popular National Steel string model. The ES-335, or P-90, was introduced in 1958. The P-90, an extremely thin body, featured a modern "bridge" tremolo system, which is something that became standard with the majority of guitar models after the P-90. It had a headstock shape similar to that of the Les Paul.

i've got a les paul junior also. it is a 1968 with minor wood changes and a 1968 paf reissue. it's in really good condition. all original pickups, controls. it has one of the best pafs i've ever heard. it has a namm appraisal of $800. it's absolutely gorgeous. while reviewing serial numbers with an es-335, i thought i should mention that the serial number stamped inside the body is not identical to the one stamped on the label. also, while most manufacturers do stamp the serial number somewhere on the fingerboard, i have not seen it stated how high on the neck. actually, the serial number of the guitar was noted in the "pro" column of the invoice and the "e-335" was marked in the corresponding portion on the warranty card. this indicates that the serial number on the invoices and warranty card is for the body only. in my opinion, the serial number being used for guitar dating is the one stamped inside the body of the guitar, unless there is a unique or other variation that could be, and was, used. that's what i date the guitar on, not what some label, invoice or warranty card says. if you go to the gibson website and use the search engine it is fairly easy to find serial numbers. the website states to use the search engine by entering guitar serial number. of course, you can limit the numbers that come up using the other variables if you want to narrow the search. i have and continue to sell many used gibson guitars since 2001. i do not know where these guitars came from. i am guessing that they were probably auctioned off in order to recover the investment of the auctioners.
