figure 4. in figure 4, n is the number of unique subsidies received by the firms; s is the sum of the yearly subsidies and $ftot$ the total sum of the financial resources available to the firm; f is the average fraction of subsidies out of the total financial resources available to the firm; a is the sum of the subsidies of the matched controls of the firms. the dots are grouped by the years. note that some values are missing due to the lack of information on subsidies received or financial resources. the final section of the appendix examines the efficiency of public funds in sustaining firms. table 3 presents the number of subsidies, total subsidies, subsidies, financial resources, and financial resources available to the firms in the sample. this table also contains a set of descriptive statistics. to analyze the contractile properties of dhf cardiomyocytes, we determined the passive force ($f_{passive}$) and the total force (f_{total}). in dhf cells, $f_{passive}$ was significantly higher than in control cells, whereas f_{total} did not differ significantly between the groups. to rule out confounding factors, we determined the force-pca relation in both groups of cardiomyocytes. with increasing pca, there was no significant difference between the pca for f_{total} of the control and dhf groups. the myofilament ca sensitivity of dhf cardiomyocytes is therefore increased, with no loss of contractile function. a recent study demonstrated that a dysfunctional ca release channel in dhf cardiomyocytes may be associated with an increased ca sensitivity of the myofilaments (hansen et al., 2009).

as shown in figure 4, the 2 complete dependence groups, with an increase in productivity after receiving the subsidy, showed an increase in productivity that was more than 10 times that of the control group (p 5ec8ef588b
