The best way to fix this is to make it slightly blurred, then re-crop it back to being sharp. In this case, you could just crop the blurry photo in your photo editor. This would tell the customer that it's a bit blurry and not really something you want them to see so they might think a bit better of you. Another one is where you use a photo of a place you have visited. If you're a tourist that visited somewhere, you would be open to having your photo taken. You could do a Google search on your phone and search for people who have taken the same photo. Editing the photo in Photoshop could easily remove the tourist's face from it, show the place a little blurrier, which could just make the difference. 933d7f57e6
