The bioavailability of the glucocorticoid triamcinolone (TA) is significantly influenced by glucocorticoid-specific binding in the body and free TA concentrations in the blood. Compared with the separate administration of TA and of progesterone, a C18 progestin, the co-administration of these two drugs in a single preparation yields significantly increased concentrations of free TA, and these concentrations remain increased throughout the study period. Since, in clinical practice, TA is given in doses of 4 to 16 mg, the bioavailability of a combination of 4 mg of TA and 0.25 mg of progesterone (Clamortel) is here assessed. Three groups of 10 healthy male volunteers were administered either 4 mg of TA (A), 4 mg of TA and 0.25 mg of progesterone (B), or 4 mg of TA and 1 mg of estradiol (E) (C). Blood samples were collected before and for up to 24 h after drug administration. TA concentrations were measured by high-performance liquid chromatography. In comparison with a separate TA administration, the bioavailability of TA in the co-administration form is significantly higher. The increase in TA plasma concentrations is due to reduced binding of TA to cortisol receptors, a finding in agreement
